Cool stats, but at what time were you on chat roulette? I bet the composition of users changes significantly by time particularly by country (different time zones).

You bought a certainly valuable blog I have been here studying for about half an hour. I'm a beginner and your write-up is valuable for me. These methods are unfounded, but they say that most of their rules are only to apply to many people who overdra. I have a web page about Jordan 1 shoes, we can exchange our idea. Jordan Flight 9 www.barstoolcam.com offers users the option to create his/her own groups. Groups can be public or private.

Currently, the site has a World Cup theme, which seems fitting for the moment.

I like it, anyway. Fewer "naked man" surprises!

Cool Statistics, the fact that 89% of chatroulette users are male is pretty weird. I have found a Chatroulette site with girls only, its called <http://chatroulettégirls.com> and this site was created just because 89% of Chatroulette users are male. Check it out, it's pretty cool and free!

i think also skewing data is that users seeking "perverts" (ie: guys looking for girls showing boobs) should be counted in the pervert category, because they're also contributing to sexualization of the network. Nothing wrong with sex, but it's for people who want it. surely there are some users who have other interests. an interesting metric would be "how many users are only motivated by sex" and "how many users are open to non-sexual interaction" and "who are they"

Its interesting to note that even 70-80% chatters are male still chatroulette

attracts people to it..this indicates that its not just people hanging around for girls but they are interested in random chat as well

Chatroulette is changing constantly and has improved greatly. It will become the one and only dominating the random video chat service. Video chat is the future social networking.

I think these statistics are highly dependent upon the time of use (time of: day/week/year). Probably higher rate of pervs during the day, higher rate of college students during nights and weekends, and more children on during summer.

I tried chatroulette for a few days. Here's my additional observation:

What % of people are racists? As an asian-american it's very obvious that I'm, well, asian. Yet a surprisingly high % of people, when they first see me, will either "ching chong chong choo!!" or "NI HAO MAH!!!!!" in a very non-flattering way. Typically I will say, "Dude I'm American" at which point they will continue the ridiculous mocking of asian languages and I next them.

also check tr:chatroulette

I use the term "racist" a little loosely. I actually have stayed on to talk to a few of them and they just turn out to be somewhat "normal" people (college kids) typically from the US. What's interesting is how the interface of chatroulette seems to allow people to act out in ways they probably wouldn't do normally in society in open public (sort of like how people are more likely to act out road rage while in a car).

My anecdotal observation too (which may not be too surprising) is that the people in metro areas or those that were going to good schools typically did NOT act this way.

I think you failed to take into account different timezones for location. Because chatroulette picks a match from around the world, the time in which you collect your data is extremely important. Thus, if you had run your experiment for longer than 2 hours across multiple days, then I'm sure you would get very different responses. Interesting statistical breakdown, regardless of how unscientific your methodology was.
